Introducing our Summer Intern

"My name is Emily Ebersol and I'm a Master of Architecture candidate at the Taubman College of Architecture and Urban Planning at the University of Michigan. I completed my Bachelor of Science in Architecture at the University of Pittsburgh in 2019.

I believe that people don't have problems, they have potential. It is the perpetuation of the idea that architects have all the solutions that results in disconnected, decontextualized, and misinformed design. Making people feel valued, heard, and responsible for their situations is the power we have as architects and is what I believe my responsibility is as a designer and advocate. I am excited to be a part of the CDCR team this summer and look forward to the conversations, thoughtful design, and community engagement ahead."

America's Cities Were Designed to Oppress

"Architects and planners have an obligation to protect health, safety and welfare through the spaces we design. As the George Floyd protests reveal, we've failed."

Bryan Lee Jr. declares, "Right now, our obligation to each other, to the built environment, and in solidarity with black lives is to hold all complicit actors in these systems accountable.

The profession of architecture is as complicit as any. This is a profession swarming with "white moderates more devoted to order than to justice," to quote everyone's favorite civil rights leader, Dr. King. Now the field is faced with another critical moment to act in accordance with justice over order. It is not clear if we will make the right choice." Read the full article here.

THE JUST CITY LAB (Harvard Graduate School of Design) investigates the ways design and planning contribute to conditions of justice and injustice in our cities.

COLLOQATE DESIGN is a multidisciplinary nonprofit Design Justice practice focused on expanding community access to, and building power through, the design of social, civic, and cultural spaces.

10 DESIGN JUSTICE NETWORK PRINCIPLES that guide Design Justice and aim to design processes, center people who are normally marginalized by design, and use collaborative, creative practices to address the deepest challenges our communities face.
